In today's society, going to college is a must. The young adults need a higher education to get better jobs. The young adults will be able to have a career that they love and can make a living on. Even with all of the young adults who attend college, most will still end up in poverty. The cost of attending college is what causes the high poverty rate. The students aren't able to pay off the college debt until they get a good job.

Many young adults can't wait to get out of their parents' house and on their own. They don't realize the actual cost and responsibility it takes to live on your own. Some young adults will graduate high school and go to college. Others will graduate high school and get a job. Then there are some who won't even graduate high school. All of these are factors that contribute to the high poverty rate.

The young adults who don't graduate high school are going to be less likely to get a good job. They will end up with a job that only pays minimum wage. This makes it very hard for the young adults to make a living and stay out of poverty.

The young adults who graduate high school and get a job are more likely to stay out of poverty. They have a better chance at getting a good job than those who don't graduate high school. They are still going to have a hard time making a living.

The young adults who graduate high school and go to college are more likely to get better jobs. The poverty level will be lower for these adults in the long run. It is these young adults that cause the high poverty rate, because many of them can't pay off their college tuition. Many of these students are now living by themselves and have to pay for the college education by their selves.

Idaho needs to emphasize the importance of a college education and the need for financial aid. There are many students who don't know about the many scholarships that are offered throughout the U.S. There are students who think that if they can't get a full-ride then they might as well not go at all.

As a senior in high school, I am faced with these problems that I have listed above. However, I choose to go to college and get a great job. I am trying to get as many scholarships as I can to help pay for the college tuition. It will be hard to stay out of poverty, but I will do the best I can.

My community could get a program that made the high school seniors more aware of the benefits that a college education can offer. The program could also contain information on scholarships. The program needs to tell the college bound students where to look for financial aid. It can also help the students the best that they can to get the money that they need. I think that a program like this could help a lot in our school.

I think that by making the students more aware of what college has to offer may increase the amount that attend a college or university, however, this could raise the poverty level even more. If the students are aware of all the scholarships and other financial aid that is available then it should decrease the poverty rate. With all of this being said, I think that a program that covers these problems would really help out Idaho. If this program can help the college bound students financially then it will lower the poverty rate.
